

The URL tells the web browser:

- Where to go
- How to talk to where it's going
- What to ask for when it gets there

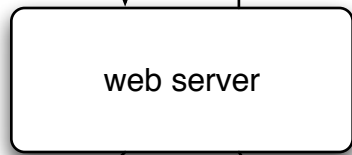

The presented content, once the browser sticks it in front of you, may be static or dynamic. Static content will not change until you ask the browser to get something else. Dynamic content may change without changing the URL that you're "on" within the web browser.

HTTP request

HTTP response

Response body can be any of the following (actually it can be anything, but these are typical):

